Note: Ray Joe Jones lived on the family farm most of his life. He was a tobacco farmer and helped support the farm. He was drafted into the U.S. Army during WWII but saw no military action. During this time his absence caused a hardship because his parents were aging. He suffered health problems while in the Army and received a medical discharge. He was a wonderful and loving person. He developed Lou Gehrig's disease and died of self inflicted gunshot wounds during the latter stages of the disease.
