

World War I Draft Registration Records
Middle Tennessee Journal of Genealogy & History
Vol. XVII, Number 3/115

World War I draft registration cards are an excellent source of information about men born between 1875 and 1900. The Tennessee registration files are available on microfilm at the Tennessee State Library and Archives,¹ and records for most other states have been microfilmed by the National Archives. These other states' records can be borrowed on interlibrary loan through the LDS church. Not all registrants served, and not all who served are found among the registrations (those who were already enlisted in the regular army, for example, did not register). 24 million cards were filed nationwide, representing 23% of our population in 1918.

Registration forms vary according to the date, but generally they include the registrant's full name, date of birth, race, citizenship, occupation, approximate height and weight, and original signature (or mark). Genealogists will especially benefit from the requirement that the man's full name be given, as few other records of this period require including the middle name.

The laws providing for draft registration were national in scope. The first registration was taken June 5, 1917, and included men aged 21 through 31. One June 5, 1918, and August 25, 1918, additional registrations were held to include men who had turned 21 since the prior registration dates. On September 12, 1918, the registration was extended to include men aged 18 through 45, encompassing a much larger group of potential draftees. The Armistice was signed November 11, 1918 and local boards closed 31 March 1919.

The form used in 1917 asked for soldier's place of birth, occupation and by whom employed and where, number of dependants. In June 1918 the form was revised to include the father's birthplace. The September 1918 form did not include the soldier's or father's place of birth, but did ask for the name of the next of kin. The records indicate whether the men requested an exemption from the draft; in the 1917 registration it was common for the men to request exemption because their occupation was farming. Other exemptions were claimed due to disabilities.²

Records are arranged alphabetically by state, including Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico and Washington, D.C. They are file thereunder alphabetically by county or city, and then by names of registrants. Records for rural areas are arranged in one alphabetical sequence for the whole county. However, some men who lived across county lines were registered in an adjoining county.

Urban areas were divided into registration districts, generally along political ward boundaries. For example, there were 189 draft boards in New York City during World War I, and the records for each of them are alphabetized separately. This makes searching for urban ancestors more difficult, but not impossible.

²The introduction to the National Archives film publication indicates that further records of exemption claims and appeals are on file at the National Archives field offices. Tennessee records would be in the Atlanta regional office.

Description: ancestry.com

In 1917 and 1918, approximately 24 million men living in the United States completed a registration card. This represented approximately 98% of men under the age of 46 covering a huge portion of the population of the U.S. at the time. Total U.S. population in 1917-1918 was about 100 million individuals. In other words, close to 25% of the total population is represented in this record set.

The period of 1880-1920 was a high immigration period to the United States. Young men were required to register for the draft regardless of their U.S. citizenship status. This means that a large portion of immigrant men registered and gave information of birth date, birthplace, and in most cases their father's birthplace and nearest relative.

It should be noted that aliens were required to register but were not subject to induction into the American military. Persons already in the military did not register. Recent Italian emigrants wrote their last names first, resulting in some cards being filed under first names. Cards of Hispanics may be filed under their mother's maiden name surname if the registrant gave both parents' surnames. Also, men who resided in British territories sometimes listed themselves simply as British citizens without noting their origin in Canada, Australia, Ireland, Jamaica, etc. Illiterate men were unable to spell their names and birth location, so researchers should be quite flexible in searching for the spelling of names of illiterate men.
