Audrey Burton Loftis told a story about the day her Grandmother, Mahulda Jane Thompson Jernigan died. She said that her family went to visit their grandparents, Mahulda and John Tilford Jernigan. Some of her cousins were visiting that day also.

Burton recalled that her favorite radio program was called "Stella Dallas" and it was to be broadcasted the day she was at her grandparents house.

"Stella Dallas" was a daytime serials such as, "Ma Perkins," & "Just Plain Bill." Many of these programs were sponsored by the soap companies and home medication purveyors like Doan's pills. "Stella Dallas," the long-running NBC serial drama first broadcasted in 1937. One of the most famous Hollywood soaps, this was first a best-selling novel, a play, a silent film, and a radio serial that ran for 18 years.

Burton had been playing with one of her cousin and they turned on the radio. The "Stella Dallas" show was starting in a few minutes. The other cousin didn't want to listen to that show. The two girls fought so loudly about what show to listen to that their parents made them turn off the radio and everyone went home.

Muhulda was said to have sat down after everyone left and ate an orange. She then laid down for a nap and died of a heart attack.
