This is what the original Cookeville Shirt Company building looked like in the 1930s. The three-story building has since been demolished and replaced with an almost identical building.

This is what the building looks like today. More renovations have been done on the inside, but a new roof was put in place.

Downtown Cookeville has a lot of history in its buildings. One of those buildings is located across from the Leslie Town Centre.

Even though the former Cookeville Shirt Company building has been remodeled — inside and out — there are a number of historic aspects that still exist within it.

“We tried to save as much of the original building as possible,” Mike Hall, co-owner of the building, said. “We began work sometime in August.”

The company was one of Putnam County’s oldest manufacturing plants. The business began in the North Walnut building in 1937, even though the building was built in 1925, according to state real estate records. But it is believed that there were two other manufacturers prior to that time, beginning in 1928.

A majority of the employees were women at the plant, making shirts on orders from leading companies in the United States. It was reported that anywhere between 2,300 and 2,500 dozen shirts were completed each week.

The workers at the plant received pieces (sleeves, collars, cuffs, etc.) from the wholeseller and put it together. The third floor consisted of pattern marking, matching material, spreading the material out and cutting it into various pieces.

Since the plant closed some years back, the building has been occupied by various business, the most recent being a family medical clinic that has since relocated elsewhere in town.

Over the last few months, work has been going on at the building to make room for Community Pathology Laboratory, a practice that is moving from next door.

“Dr. Scott Hall (dermatologist) needed more space, so when this building became available, we started renovating it,” Hall said. “We had to re-do the floors, starting with pulling up the wood floor and filling it in with a lot of gravel and then putting concrete in, build in walls, and a new roof.”

The physicians at CPL — Dr. Glen Hall, Dr. Meiklejohn McKenzie, Dr. Jason Nolan and Dr. Don Asberry — are all excited to move into the expanded space.

“Originally, Dr. Hall, Dr. Walter Moss and Dr. Sam Glasgow owned the building and did renovations some 20 years ago,” Hall said.

The original tin ceiling is still in place in one part of the building, with Hall having to search the Internet for spare pieces to replace parts of it with.

As for finding any historic items, Hall hasn’t had much luck.

“We found a very old sewing machine, but that’s about it,” he said.

However, original regulations of the plant have been found and framed, along with photos of the original building, featuring little road signs and older road signs.

Moving the practice takes coordination, but it’s not far to move. The billing offices will still be in the old building — for now.

More work will need to be done on the building in the future.

“The windows aren’t original, but they do need replacing,” Hall noted. “We’re very pleased with it.”

Community Pathology serves hospitals and clinics all over the region.

Daily from Maine to California shoppers were buying men’s dress shirts manufactured by Cookeville Shirt Company.

The actual start of the plant goes back to around 1926 to the old Putnam Overall Co. The plant was located on 1st Street and North Walnut Avenue, making it perhaps the oldest large scale industry in the county. Part of the original structure of handmade bricks is include in the present plant and is used as a warehouse for the Cookeville Shirt Company.

Cookeville Shirt Company was organized in July 1938. On July 5th operations started at the plant with twenty-five employees, with plans to grow the plant as large as three hundred employees in a short amount of time.

The first products from the factory were work shirts, but after a few years the line was change to men’s dress shirts. Cookeville Shirt manufactured from fabric to finished product.

Production ran from about 2,300 – 2, 500 dozen shirts per week. The plant manager at the time, Flynn Mabry, said that the greatest change in production was the introduction of wash-and-wear and permanent-press materials. These materials had almost completely replaced cottons.

Flynn Mabry was plant manager of 240 employees, most of them women, and the majority of them from Putnam County.

COOKEVILLE — Iris Inez McGee went to her eternal homecoming on April 2, 2019.

Inez was born Aug. 23, 1922, on the family farm in Jackson County. She lived on the farm for the remainder of her life helping care for the farm she grew up on as well as her parents as they aged. She will be remembered as an excellent seamstress, great cook and always having a bountiful, beautiful garden. Most of all, Inez was a compassionate caregiver her entire life. Even in her last years on earth she was known for trying to take care of those around her.

Inez retired from the Cookeville Shirt Factory where she worked for more than 25 years. After retirement she worked at all the local elections in Jackson County through her 90th birthday.

Inez, known as Aunt Nez, by her nieces and nephews, is survived by sister-in-law, Devonia McGee of Cookeville; nieces, Janet McGee of Knoxville, Dr. Kim McGee Wright (Allen) and Patricia Allen Meadows of Cookeville, and Jenevie Horner Cox of College Grove, Tennessee; nephew, David Allen of Algood; special niece, Chelsea Mercer of Greeneville, Tennessee; and a host of great and great-great-nieces and nephews.

She was preceded in death by her parents, Cloves Garland McGee and Lola Phillips McGee of Cookeville; brother, Quinton C. (Jack) McGee of Cookeville; sisters, Mildred Horner of College Grove, Tennessee, Elese Allen of Gainesboro, Tennessee; and infant brother, Donald Dale McGee. She was also preceded in death by nephews, Quinton Harry Horner of Nashville, and Dale Allen of Cookeville; and nieces, Vickie Pippin and Linda Garrison of Gainesboro, Tennessee.

Inez was raised in the Spring Creek Cumberland Presbyterian Church of Cookeville.

Visitation will be April 6, from 10-11:30 a.m. at the chapel of Hooper-Huddleston & Horner Funeral home.

Graveside services will then follow at noon at Smith Chapel Cemetery, led by Christian Smith of the Cookeville First Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

The family would like to express their appreciation for the love shown to Aunt Nez during her last years by caregivers, Lisa Dudney, Patsy Jenkins, and the nurses and staff of NHC in Cookeville.
